Reliable communication and collaboration across distributed offices, home-office locations, and client locations is a critical aspect of the technology required to support today's mobile workforce. In the past, people would gather in an on-site conference room. Today's business world requires both on-site and remote employees alike to rely on conferencing, multimedia, collaboration, instant messaging, and videoconferencing to get their jobs done. Managing these technologies within a single interface is essential for maintaining profitability.
