Summary of related law:

In Australia, the formation and enforcement of service contracts are governed by Australian contract law, specifically the common law principles of offer, acceptance, and consideration. There is no specific law that applies exclusively to service contracts. The terms of a service contract must be clear, certain, and agreed upon by both parties. Australian Consumer Law, which is a national law, may also apply depending on the nature of the contract and the parties involved. It provides protection to consumers in relation to unfair contract terms and guarantees regarding the provision of services. Additionally, intellectual property laws govern the use of Microsoft materials, ensuring that the rights and interests of the parties are protected.
