SHAREPOINT CONTENT TRANSLATION

THE CHALLENGE

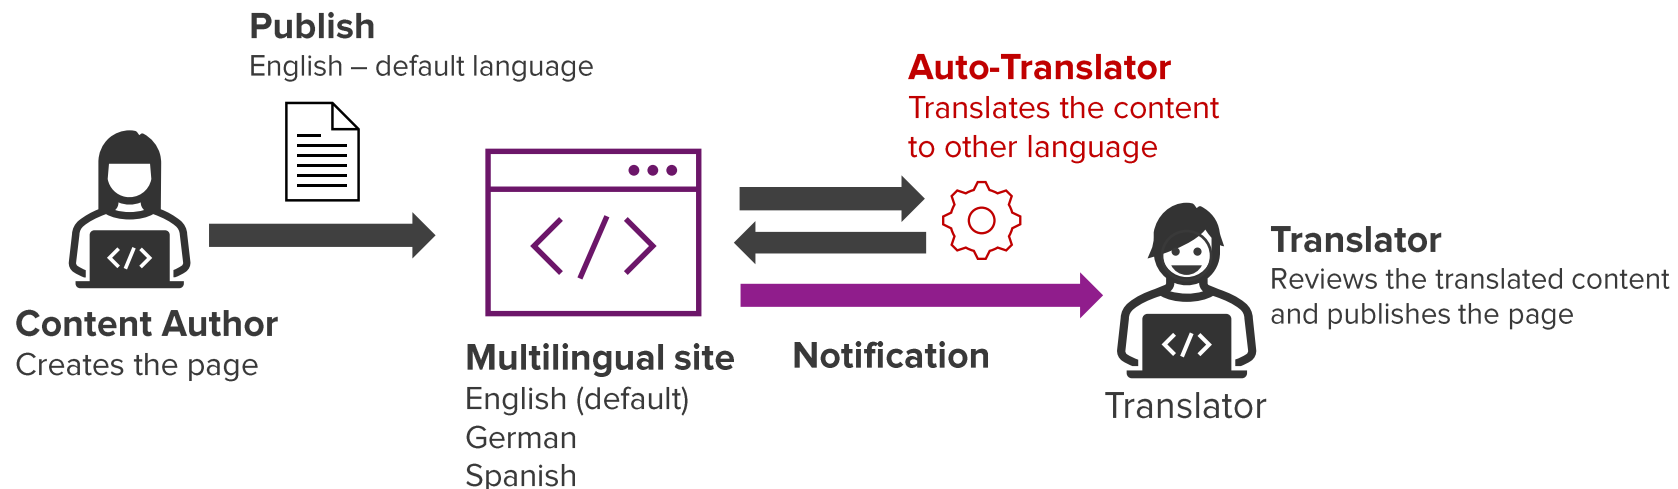

- SharePoint content requires manual translation by an editor
- Time taken to deliver multilingual content to audiences because of the manual translation effort
- Delays in publishing critical content for end users due to additional reviews and approvals for translated content

OUR APPROACH

Automatically translate SharePoint page content for the desired language.

- ✓ Easy to use – Click to create the content in an alternate language and let the workflow do the rest.
- ✓ Intelligent translation – Support for multiple languages is available backed by Microsoft Azure and Translator service.
- ✓ Integration – Seamlessly integrates with the native publishing process in SharePoint.
- ✓ Speed – Content can be automatically translated in a matter of minutes.
- ✓ Automated – New or modified content is automatically translated and added to SharePoint.

Holidays

Summer holidays are nearing and Coronavirus is definitely on a rampage. The virus has touched 60 countries, which is almost half of the world. What started at the end of December 2019 has reached March 2020 and will soon reach summer. And now, with summers just a few weeks away, people across half of the globe are worried about their summer holidays. Is it still on the cards? How long will the virus last? These are a few questions bothering millions right now.

According to experts, summer vacations could just be off the table with the Coronavirus scare this year. Even ardent travellers are being asked to put off travelling to avoid catching the new virus as nowhere is safe.

With more than 60 countries affected by the virus, the demand for international travel has decreased drastically since the outbreak. As per data from travel analytics firms, the number of flights booked from the US and the UK has fallen significantly for the five-week period ending February 23 amidst the fear of Coronavirus.

The travel experts say that the longer the situation lasts, the more likely it is that this will convert into "no travel at all" year. This being a large-scale crisis, people might look at short domestic trips over long-haul. The demand for domestic travel might go up as people are safer in their home destinations.

The experts also believe that the majority of people, especially in the western world, give much importance to their holidays. However, if Coronavirus continues affecting people and places by the end of April 2020, the number of cancellations of holidays might increase at a rapid rate because, of course, health is more important than a holiday.

It is to be noted that Coronavirus has already affected airlines. The International Air Transport Association has said that they have lost nearly $30 billion to the Coronavirus outbreak.

So this year, be cautious where you travel to and do your homework thoroughly.

Les vacances d'été approchent et le coronavirus est définitivement en train de se déchaîner. Le virus a touché 60 pays, soit près de la moitié du monde. Ce qui a commencé à la fin de décembre 2019 a atteint mars 2020 et atteindra bientôt l'été. Et maintenant, à quelques semaines des étés, les gens de la moitié du monde s'inquiètent de leurs vacances d'été. Est-il toujours sur les cartes? Combien de temps le virus durera-t-il? Ce sont quelques questions qui dérangent des millions de personnes en ce moment.

Selon les experts, les vacances d'été pourraient bien être hors de la table avec la peur du coronavirus cette année. Même les voyageurs ardents sont invités à reporter leurs voyages pour éviter d'attraper le nouveau virus car nulle part n'est sûr.

Avec plus de 60 pays touchés par le virus, la demande de voyages internationaux a considérablement diminué depuis l'épidémie. Selon les données des entreprises d'analyse de voyages, le nombre de vols réservés en provenance des États-Unis et du Royaume-Uni a considérablement diminué pour la période de cinq semaines se terminant le 23 février dans un contexte de peur du coronavirus.

Les experts en voyages disent que plus la situation dure longtemps, plus il est probable que cela se transformera en année « pas de voyage du tout ». Comme il s'agit d'une crise à grande échelle, les gens pourraient envisager de courts voyages intérieurs sur de longues distances. La demande de voyages intérieurs pourrait augmenter à mesure que les gens sont plus en sécurité dans leur destination d'origine.

Les experts estiment également que la majorité des gens, en particulier dans le monde occidental, accordent beaucoup d'importance à leurs vacances. Cependant, si le coronavirus continue d'affecter les personnes et les lieux d'ici la fin du mois d'avril 2020, le nombre d'annulations de vacances pourrait augmenter à un rythme rapide car, bien sûr, la santé est plus importante qu'un jour férié.

Il est à noter que le coronavirus a déjà affecté les compagnies aériennes. L'Association du transport aérien international a déclaré qu'elle avait perdu près de 30 milliards de dollars à cause de l'épidémie de coronavirus.

Donc, cette année, soyez prudent où vous voyagez et faites vos devoirs à fond.
