

UMB_Heatmap 365: Stay on the Ball and Save Time

Year after year, Microsoft announces almost 900 new features, functions, or changes for Microsoft 365. Can you effectively manage this constant influx of updates? Do you know which changes are relevant to you and which are not? Those responsible for Microsoft 365 invest up to 40 hours each month in keeping up with these changes. But is this level of commitment really necessary?

With a UMB_Heatmap 365 subscription, you will no longer miss any important updates and can save valuable time. We will diligently check all announcements on your behalf, categorize them based on urgency, and provide you with easy-to-understand recommendations.

Quantity and complexity as a challenge

Approximately 20 Microsoft 365 update messages are communicated by Microsoft via the Message Center every week. An overview of the currently planned changes can also be found on the Microsoft 365 Roadmap at <https://aka.ms/m365roadmap>, which contains over 1,500 updates. Additionally, there are regular non-technical announcements, such as price adjustments, contract changes, or new licensing rules, which are no less relevant. However, it's not just the volume of announcements that poses a challenge for every person responsible for Microsoft 365. Understanding the technical descriptions, recognizing the effects, and assessing the relevance can often be a complex task.

Malfunctions and missed opportunities as a consequence

Not every change requires intervention, but what will be the consequences if you miss relevant news? If functions are discontinued without the users' knowledge, this could, in the worst case, lead to technical problems with one of the many Microsoft 365 services. Adjustments to the licensing model can have significant commercial consequences if precautionary measures are not taken. Microsoft apps that suddenly become newly available can confuse employees because there was no accompanying introduction. However, it's not just about avoiding problems; it's also about seizing opportunities. Existing Microsoft 365 subscriptions are constantly being expanded to include relevant functions or security features that the customer may not be aware of and, therefore, does not use.
